The Middlebury Institute of International Studies is a graduate school for people who want to make positive change in the world.

Students come from more than 50 countries, fostering an international community on our close-knit campus. Degree programs focus on areas of critical importance in rapidly growing fields, including international security, human rights and social change, language and culture, sustainable development, and global management.

Institute alumni find fulfilling careers at organizations like the United Nations, U.S. State Department, and World Bank, as well as at for-profit companies in banking and consulting, and in Silicon Valley.

Our curriculum emphasizes collaborative learning and integrates culture and language studies with opportunities to apply practical, professional skills—all under the mentorship of faculty who are experienced researchers and practitioners in their fields.

Founded in 1955 as the Monterey Institute of Foreign Studies, the Institute became an official graduate school of Middlebury in 2010.

Middlebury College, founded in 1800 in Middlebury, Vermont, provides 2,500 undergraduate students with a rigorous liberal arts education and a wide range of opportunities to pursue interests and experiences outside the classroom.

The Institute includes several prominent research and program centers: James Martin Center for Nonproliferation Studies, Center for the Blue Economy, and Center for Conflict Studies. Faculty, current students, and a global network of alumni actively address some of the most critical issues of our time.

Other Middlebury schools and programs include the Middlebury Language Schools, the Middlebury C.V. Starr Schools Abroad, the Middlebury Bread Loaf School of English, the Middlebury Bread Loaf Writers’ Conferences, and the Middlebury School of the Environment.
